Gerilyn Gaskill began painting at a young age with instruction by her great-grandfather, August Seiler, who painted coastal imagery. By her high school years, she was living in Rehoboth and received instruction from Howard Schroder. That was when she developed a passion for fine-art painting.

She works primarily with watercolor, often using the white paper as a color. She combines loose washes, wet-into-wet, dry brush, and all the techniques possible with the transparency of this unique medium.

When not painting she is teaching others to paint, to experience the same joy she has. She believes everyone has the ability to paint whether they know it or not. She volunteers with local youth classes as well as instructs at many of the areas' art leagues.
