Deb's artistic journey has spanned several decades and a variety of mediums. She began her formal artistic training in the 1980s with a photography course at Cecil College, where her passion for capturing landscapes and wildlife first took shape. This love of visual expression led her to explore oil painting through art classes in the 2000s. Always eager to learn and experiment, Deb later studied pottery with Art Space on Main in her former hometown of Elkton, Maryland. Her experience across multiple artistic disciplines inspired her to expand into acrylic painting and alcohol ink art. Today, Deb owns a small business specializing in alcohol ink creations on tile. She treasures the opportunity to be part of a vibrant artistic community and continues to explore new creative avenues, embracing the joy of learning and artistic discovery.
